For South Africa to build a fiscally sustainable student-financing model that enhances access to enhance access to the higher education, the government specifically the Department of Basic Education and the Department Higher Education and Training together with the Department of Finance to resort into more financing options,

Those parents who work but cannot afford to save the money for the studies of their children due to the inability to save or poor saving skills, the department may assist them in saving the money that will be used to fund the studies of the children once they finish with their schooling.

The government may also do investment programmes with the terms that after the investment, the funds will only be used to fund the studies of the children. This will not only give parents the opportunity to save and earn investment outcomes, it will also enable them children who want to work after matric to save if they plan to further their studies after a certain number of years after completing with their school.

The government already have certain bursaries but it will be a good favour for students and the future of the country too to introduce other bursaries but those bursaries must work a certain way a little opposite to the ones we have now. Let be bursaries that will enable the students to choose on whether they will to become employees nor employers. Those that want to become employees, let there be a funding scheme that will enable the students after graduating to start the business they have in mind and let there be a duration and an amount of income generated by the business and take certain percentages of the refund to be given back to the government and there must be another percentage that must be given to other trusts and future employers to start business but must start in the studying phase.

As the government have already implemented, bursaries are given to certain financial classes which range from R0 of income per year and that tells us there are many South Africans that are in need of them bursaries. The government must create a website where learners, students and parents will put in their IDs in every space of 3 months to be evaluated and be given the proof that they are not earning a lot in their households and which will also provide a signed by the financial institutions like the South African Revenue Services, the South African Social Security Agency and the Department of Social Development and which will also act as a declaration that this certain household is not getting an income or gets a little income.
